

Should Likelihood of Confusion Parameters of Comparison be Adapted to New Technologies?

By Juan Felipe Acosta Sánchez

Recently, there have been several webinars, conferences, and discussions concerning Algorithms, Internet of Things, Blockchain and the so-called Artificial Intelligence. The impact they have had on tools such as Aiva, Dream Writer and software in general, creating new inventions that are not yet materialized, has been the subject of several hypotheses on the future of intellectual property. In some cases, those hypotheses have become true and, in others, remain to be corroborated.

A Letter to Independent Inventors How To Save Money on Your Patent Applications

By Peter L. Brewer and Dr. Mark Houghton

Not every inventor works for a corporation with an R&D budget. Not every inventor works for a company that pays a law firm for his or her patent applications. Many of our patent clients file applications at the rate of one or two a year, and are responsible for paying their own attorney's fees. We typically call these "independent inventors," or sometimes "private inventors."
